035B - The Magic of Detail

17th May 2011

Three designers talk about their approach to creating fine construction detailing as the focus of their design solutions.

Construction is an essential element within the garden providing structure and spatial control. It is often the unsung hero of garden design with planting always hogging the headlines but without it our gardens would be confusing and incoherent.

Adam Frost and Olivia Kirk hop out of the Chelsea showground for the evening where, as temporary neighbours, they are constructing two of this year's urban gardens. Paul Hensey has his show garden feet up this year for Chelsea but is making a name for himself as a writer for the Garden Design Journal on construction and materials. Each will be sharing their individual approach to the incorporation of the built form into the softness of the garden.
